Drought forcing use of old hay for feed

By JAMES A. SMITH
Extension Agent

The '83 drought is causing some feeders to reach back for hay that was harvested two or more years ago. Some are asking what about the feeding value. There will be losses of vitamin A and D, but protein, energy and mineral values should not change. There are occasions when hay dries to the point that intake is reduced.

Hay stored outside in large bales or in stacks of small bales is likely to suffer severe losses due to weathering.

The Enviornmental Protection Agency has declared Lindane a "restricted use" pesticide. Protective clothing must be worn during mixing and application. Label uses for dipping dogs and use with indoor fumigation devices has been removed.

Dog owners have used Lindane for a number of years. Dermaton Dip is now recommended. Do not use the diluted material that has been prepared more than 30 days and do not dip cats. I believe it is available only through your veterinarian. Repeat treatments may be necessary but not more than once a week.

Livestock owners need to begin thinking through some of the consequences of inadequate fencing. Much of our land lends itself to either pasture or timber production. When the land is pastured, fencing is needed to restrict cattle movement and to facilitate handling.

Last December at the "Beef Cattle Profit Clinic," Bill Collins, Va. Tech Agricultural Engineer, pointed out that proper fencing represents a sizable investment. He illustrated the problem as follows: Assume a 200 acre farm, square in shape, has three 30 acre pasture boundries (rectangular, with the length equal to three times the width) that are not connecting. Three miles of fencing is required to enclose the 90 acres of pasture, or 176 feet of fence per acre; boundry fencing around the entire farm is less than 2.24 miles long; or 59 feet of fence per acre enclosed. The effect of shape is quite obvious.

Traditional cattle fences have been either a 47 inch woven wire with a strand of barb wire on top or 4 strands barb wire.

Several years ago, high tensil fencing was introduced as an alternative to either of the two traditional fences. When properly constructed, the high tensil fence provides: Long fence life; effective livestock control; flexibility of design; low maintenance requirements; competitive costs and simplicity of construction.

Like, everything, there can be problems with a new concept: There are no construction short-cuts to an effective fence. End-anchor assemblies must be capable of maintaining individual wire tensions of up to 200 pounds in non-electrified high tensil designs. High tensil fence is not an effective restrainer of cattle with inadequate wire tension.

Students at Appomattox Middle School recently completed short stories for Mrs. Tweedy's 8th grade English classes. The best short story was written by Amy Morris.

In her short story, Amy tells of a young ambassador's daughter who is kidnapped in a foreign land for ransom. One night the teen-age girl makes her escape while her captor sleeps. However, she finds herself in the outback country of Australia alone. The young girl finally makes contact with her family through a workman who is on his way to the nearest town.

Amy is active at AMS as the president of FHA, secretary of the SCA, and president of the Drama club. She is also a member of Lucky Clover 4-H and Junior Volunteers.

Good News for Homemakers

7. Use a measuring cup to control serving size. The smaller the portion, the fewer the calories. You may be surprised to find that you've been dishing up bigger amounts than you realized.

8. If you are a sandwich lover, use one piece of thin sliced bread instead of two and spread it with reduced calorie mayonnaise, salad dressing or mustard instead of butter.

When you diet, plan meals ahead. Eat smaller meals and include a good snack in the mid-morning and mid-afternoon. This will help you feel satisfied so that you don't have hunger pangs. Many people will go a long time without food and then have difficulty controlling the amount of intake.

Another good way to help you cut down calories is to write down the things you eat. This will stop impromptu snacking and make you more conscious of your full calorie intake.

Make it a habit to eat all meals and snacks at the table. You will be less likely to snack if you don't take food out of the kitchen or dining room.

I recently read that if you will eat everything with a fork, you'd be surprised how it would help. Even if it's a sandwich, cut it with a fork and eat it very, very slowly. The slower we eat, the more we will feel satisfied. Remember, it takes 20 minutes for the message to get from the stomach to the brain that we are eating.

You wish to begin a moderate exercise program, such as walking when weather permits, or exercising to music inside your home. It's a great way to burn off calories.

If you have a homemaking question or problem, you may call 352-8244 or you may write P.O. Box 488, Appomattox, VA 24522. It is always a pleasure to hear form you and to help you.

Have a good week!
